

The SuperStore is a company with decades of existence and is currently one of the largest supermarket chains in the country. However, in a highly competitive market, challenges related to customer retention and the improvement of sales strategies are a reality. Given this scenario, the company needs to maintain a prominent position. Therefore, based on a comprehensive and detailed analysis of its database regarding customers, orders, locations, and products, strategic decisions must be made to anticipate trends, reduce operational costs, and understand consumer behavior. All of these actions are essential for the company's continuous success

The management team, together with the data team, identified three main areas of focus:

Customer Retention (1-Year Window)

Analysis

2014: After performing a cohort analysis, we identified that the highest retention rate occurred in the September cohort with an average of 11%. The other months, on average, fluctuated between 9% and 10%. The month that presented the lowest retention was March, with an average retention rate of 7%.

2015: The highest retention rates were in June (average of 16%) and November (average of 15%). On the other hand, the months with the lowest customer loyalty were April and October, with an average of 6% each.

Global Metrics: The overall global retention average for 2014 and 2015 was 10%.

Recommendations

To improve retention during low periods, implement personalized campaigns, such as discounts for recent customers and loyalty programs that encourage recurring purchases.

Customer retention following the first month of November 2014 (December) was the highest recorded. In 2015, for this same period, it was the second-highest retention. It is highly beneficial to leverage this specific season to build customer loyalty throughout the entire year.

Customer Segmentation - RFM

Analysis

We identified a solid presence of recurring purchases and a high number of products per basket within the Champions and Loyal segments. Champions: Comprise 4% of total consumers and generate 11.34% of total revenue. Loyal: Comprise 27% of total consumers and generate 51.77% of sales revenue;

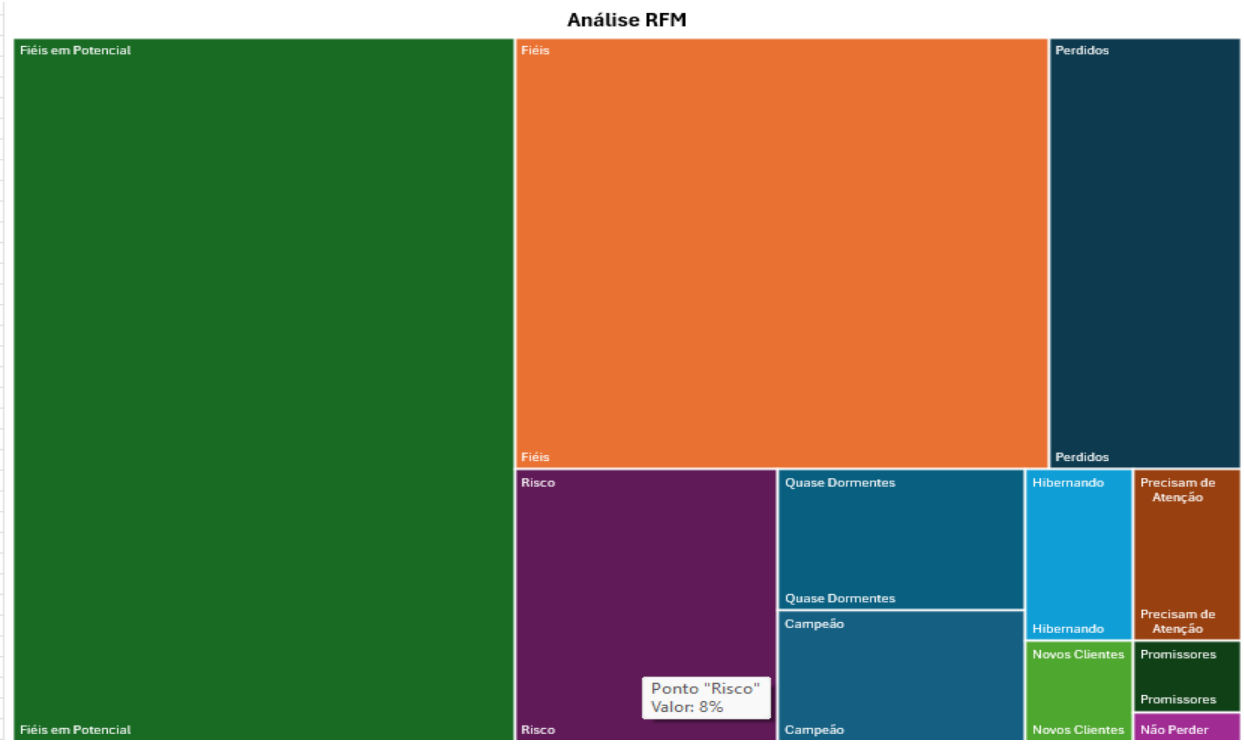

Points of Attention

The customer segments considered Lost and At Risk collectively represent about 18% of total customers and account for 14% of total revenue. These specific segments are mainly characterized by a low number of purchases in recent periods;

Recommendations

Maintain retention and loyalty strategies for the Loyal and Champions segments. Promote tailored actions to encourage Potential Loyalists to increase their shopping baskets, helping them migrate upward into the Loyal category. Evaluate actions focused on increasing purchase frequency throughout the year, allowing customers in the Lost and At Risk segments to move into the Potential Loyalists tier. Impact Scenario: If only half of the consumers currently classified as Lost are converted into Potential Loyalists, it would represent an estimated revenue increase of approximately R$ 118,653,157.43 for the company.
